JEWELRY SHARPERS WORK IN ST. LOUIS

Two Well-Appearing Men Visit Downtown Stores, but Are Unsuccessful.

IDENTITY SOON DISCOVERED.

picious and Thwarted Attempts at Trickery-Turquoises Were Reported Taken.

Two well-appearing men visited several

Proprietor and Clerks Were Sus-

prominent jewelry establishments in St. Louis Friday afternoon and told an inter-esting story of how they intended to sur-prise one of their friends by the presentato him of a locker. The strangers were well dressed and were airly covered with blazing diamonds. They said they were physicians, installed

They said they were physicians, installed in the City Hospital, and they had been named as a committee to select a present for one of the older physicians.

The present they intended to buy was a diamond locket, with raised lettering.

The ciever-appearing, well-dressed strangers were sharpers and the lowelers whom they visited soon discovered the fact, although it is reported that they pilifered a box of turquoises from one establishment. The proprietors of this establishment, however, say that nothing was stolen.

The strangers visited Mermod & Jaccard, Breadway and Locust; Hess & Cubertson, Sixth and Locust; Hess & Cubertson, Sixth and Locust streets, Fred W. Drosten, Seventh and Plue streets, and many other stores attaches were on guard when the stores attaches were on guard when the strangers arrived. The pair asked to be shown some diamond lockets, telling the story that they had told in other places. They were in the store of Hess & Cubertson only a few minutes however, evidently becoming suspicious.

In Fred W. Drosten's store they were not shown any goods, but explained their wants and said they would return. They did not fulfill their promise.

One of the men is described as being about 189 pounds in weight, five feet ten inches in height, and smooth shaven. The other is about six feet in hight and weighs about 289 pounds. Both wore dark clothes, frock coats and were of light complexion.
They used good language, and talked like men who had plenty of money.
The World's Fair Dedication exercises this week will cause many sharpers, it is thought, to make St. Louis their headquartern, and jewelers especially have been on close guard. The men who make jewelers their victims are among the cleverest crocks in the country, and the dealers have to keep a close watch on them.

ROBERT E. LEE AS A RELIGIOUS MAN.

The Reverend J. William Jones of Richmond, Va., secretary of the Confederate Memorial Association, paid a tender and eloquent tribute to General Lee in a sermon on 'The Religious Character of Robert B. Lee," at the North Avenue Baptist Church.

Church.

Doctor Jones was a personal friend of General Lee, having come in contact with him many times during the war and being chaplain at Washington College (now Washington and Lee, University), Lexington, Va., during General Lee's presidency of that institution.

Dector Jones ways many incidents of the ton, Va., during General Lee's presidency of that institution.

Ductor Jones gave many incidents of the piety and deeply religious character of the great Confederate leader.

The sermon was preceded by the singing of "How Firm a Foundation, Fe Saints of the Lord." Doctor Jones mentioned that this hymn was a favorite both of General Lee and General Jackson, and was sung at the funerals of the two soldiers.

Doctor Jones took as his text Acts xi, 2i: "For he was a good man and full of the Holy Ghost and of faith."

"It would not be appropriate to use this language of many of the world's public men, and especially of the soldiers." he said, "but I am here to declare with emphasis that it may well be said of the great man of whom I am to speak. Robert Edward.

Doctor Jones told of an incident at Mine Run in Nevember, 1864, when Meade had crossed the river and Lee moved out to meet him. With General A. P. Hill, Lee was riding in the rear of the lines when he came to one of the prayer meetings which were held so often when a battle was imminent.

"He reined up Traveler," and the doctor,
"and when those humble soldiers arose from their knees they found they had been leading the devotions of their commanderin-chief." from their knees they found they had been leading the devotions of their commander in-chief."

Doctor Jones spoke of the plous tone of General Lee's dispatches. In announcing the victory of Cold Harbor he began: "Profoundly grateful to Almighty God for the signal victory granted us." After the seven days around Richmond he began his dispatch: "Profoundly grateful to the Giver of all victories." After Chancellorville it was, "We have again to thank Almighty God for another signal victory."

"He was quiet and not in the habit of pushing himself forward," said Doctor Jones, "but we chaplains found that we had a friend at headquarters."

Doctor Jones expressed the belief that General Lee was the greatest college president this country ever possessed and said he never knew of one who seemed more anxious for the religious good of the students.

"When one matriculated," he said, "he would ask him about his religious status, and would then furnish the pastors of the town with lists of the students to look after.

"Then he'd stir us up, too, saying: Does my young friend Brown or Smith attend your church." I wish you'd look him up. And we didn't dare not to do it. We felt that "Marse Robert's eye was on us. I hope that there was a higher motive, too, but his influence was very potent.

"To the Reverend Doctor Kirkpatrick, professor of moral philosophy, he said once with tears in his eyes." On Doctor, if i could only be satisfied that all these young more to desire."

Doctor Jones spoke touchingly of General Lee's death, "He left no fast words," he said. "He had presided at a meeting of the vestry of his church that day when there was an important quession of raising money for some purpose. He was one of the most liberal contributors to the came of benevolence i ever more.
